In an image of the beauty of life, I see a trained and hardworking worker standing and doing his work with energy as a symbol of effort and steadfastness. Using a hoist, he pulls zinc sheets up with chains, as an artist who creates beauty and harmony in empty space with his hands. In the background of the picture, the yellow color of the helmet is clearly visible, it shows the vigilance and caution that he plays in doing the work, while the other perspective is doing his duties with different colors, depicting beauty and life.

This is a beautiful picture that is a poetic song, in which every part has a special role in the song of life. Looking at this image, one realizes that it hides the beauty and value of life in those small details that may not seem surprising at first glance, but each of them tells stories from behind the curtain of life.

In the embrace of the comfort of an industrial environment, a worker tired of daily hardships, with a face that is neither full of depression nor full of hope, sits on an iron beam that is being formed by his hand, and takes a rest full of peace. The traces of the blackness of his hands, like the scars that have deeply marked his soul, have danced on his face, and this image, like a bitter and sweet fruit, remembers a story of effort, hope and sacrifice.

In this hall, the sighs and breaths of the workers play as the music of life, he participates in this dance of life with a dress that provides a soul blush from the heart of work and excitement and a mask that helps to hide his sadness and fatigue. Here, in the midst of iron tools and the sound of gigantic machines, he calls to a sudden calm, a calm that can only be found in the embrace of hot and cold metal screams.
